

PREMIUM DEER VELVET ANTLER PRODUCTS

Velvet Antler is the word used to describe the elk antler before it has started to calcify. In the Orient, velvet has been used for over 2,000 years as a natural remedy for a variety of ailments. In North America velvet is marketed as a dietary supplement. Research promotes the following abilities of velvet antler: reduce inflammation, influence body metabolism, support immune function, protect damaged tissues, and improve blood, liver and kidney function.

Deer Velvet Antler contains a combination of amazing nutrients not found together in any other known whole food we eat today. You can obtain the best food ingredients naturally all in one place!

Velvet Antler supplements are now gaining significant popularity for its proven muscle building and natural enhancement formula and improves natural energy. Antler Fuel's line of products provides consumers the options of how they want to experience the benefits of Antler Velvet.

An average 2-year-old will grow approximately 9 lbs. of velvet. Generally, bulls increase velvet yields every year until maturity. Mature bulls (7 to 8-years-old) may produce 30-40 lbs. of velvet. • A herd with an even distribution from yearlings to mature bulls will average 15 lbs. per head. • There is an expanding demand for velvet products in North America. • It is a classic renewable resource <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • For a long time, antler has been dried and used in ancient medicines for a health remedy and health maintaining purposes and consumed as an anti-inflammatory, anti-cancer, immune stimulant and pro-growth agent. • For its promising results, the substance has been converted into easy to use line of nutraceutical supplement products. The variety of the Antler Fuel line of products allows consumers the choice of how they want to experience Velvet Antler.

NutriCellula is leading the development in the production of natural supplements that contain a high concentration of naturally balanced growth factors derived from United States Antler Velvet. Growth factors can be defined as bound therapeutic protein amino acids. IGF-1 is the resource for the delivery of these amino acids. IGF-1 is the operative constituent in Pure IGF.

Benefiting from the presence of growth factors in our bodies begins by taking Pure IGF on a daily basis. Growth factors are not foreign to our systems, having played a critical role during the many years of our physical development. Adequate growth factor presence is essential for every component within the framework of our physical function. Unfortunately, as years pass, the levels of these therapeutic amino acids continue to gradually diminish in number. IGF-1 directly supplements the body to restore these growth factors to youthful levels, and to thus resume their role in the realms of preventive medicine.

Increase Energy and Physical Vigor with Deer Antler Velvet

Not everyone takes Antler Velvet to grow stronger bones or muscles. Many users just take it for extra energy and greater physical vigor and clarity of mind. Be aware that velvet gives you a different, deeper and more sustained energy, unlike caffeine.

Antler Velvet is not caffeine and doesn't feel or act like caffeine. It's not an energy drink and you don't get instant energy like you would if you took a diet pill or something with chemical enhancers. Energy from velvet comes over time as the body heals and grows healthier blood cells capable of carrying more oxygen to the organs-which is where energy comes from-the body burning fuel quickly, cleanly and efficiently.

People take velvet for more energy, but they end up with a health bonus, seeing things like:

- High cholesterol
- High blood pressure
- Migraine headaches
- Asthma
- Digestive problems
- Kidney and Liver problems
- Cold hands and feet
- Chronic skin problems (acne and psoriasis for instance)
- Overactive bladder

Studies show that when Deer Antler Velvet goes to work it protects the liver from toxins, stimulates the production and circulation of blood, and increases the number of red blood cells, which means your body can carry more oxygen to your organs. The "side effect" of the increase in all this activity is lower cholesterol, lower blood pressure, fewer migraines, decrease in asthma attacks, digestive problems and all the other things listed above.

Because the velvet cures from the foundation up-meaning blood cells, cartilage and bone, it positively affects the entire body. You can feel the increase in energy, but unless you have blood work and other tests done you won't feel or know how much your other organs are affected. The only way you "know" it's working is through the increase in energy and vigor-a sure sign that more oxygen is getting through.

Red Blood Cells and Energy

Here's a quick tutorial on energy and oxygen and why you want and need healthy red blood cells, the kind of healthy red blood cells that Deer Antler Velvet can produce.

The number one job of your red blood cells is to carry oxygen to the organs and all of your body. Even if you flunked basic science in school, you know that without oxygen we all die. And without the right amount of oxygen everything from fires, car engines and human beings struggle to burn fuel (whether that fuel is wood, gasoline or food, fuel needs oxygen). Bottom line? You need oxygen and you need a healthy amount of it. So you need healthy red blood cells capable of carrying and delivering that oxygen.

The health of red blood cells is measured by the count of hemoglobin, the protein that makes up the body of the red blood cell. When your hemoglobin count falls below 8 grams your energy and overall feeling of health falls too because your body isn't able to get the oxygen it needs. You're more likely to have headaches, pale skin and lips, and to feel a strain on your heart. You're more tired, more fatigued and you think less clearly-all because you're not getting enough oxygen. This is why people with clogged arteries have little energy. The arterial highways that carry oxygen-enriched red blood cells are narrowed and restricted, decreasing the amount of oxygen getting through to your organs.

So, if you want more energy, get more oxygen to your organs. Start by taking Deer Antler Velvet. Exercise and diet can help to move the blood around and to oxygenate it, but without healthy red blood cells to carry all that oxygen, it's not as efficient a system as it could be. Take the velvet consistently, then gradually add exercise, 15 to 30-minutes of walking a day is all experts say it takes to experience major benefits. You'll see your energy and vigor increase, even double as your body begins to experience the increase in oxygen to its blood and organs.

MANUFACTURING AND QUALITY STANDARDS Antler Fuel manufacturing standards start long before the antler velvet is made into a powder, capsule, spray or bottled. It first starts at the antler velvet farms where the antlers are grown and produced. Choice herd management practices that include sound nutritional habits are key in the result of the high quality of our antler velvet products. Our farmers use The North American Elk Breeder's established "Velvet Harvesting Guidelines," to achieve maximum nutritional value in harvested antlers. Quality control practices include processing standards established to insure product reliability and consumer safety. Raw Velvet - All velvet used in the Antler Fuel products originates from farms in Wisconsin and Michigan who supply velvet to Antler Fuel. To insure the best quality products, only premium antlers are used. Antler Fuel uses the whole beam in their antler velvet products. The whole beam utilizes all properties for an excellent synergistic product. Our antler velvet farms adhere to the NAEBA code of ethics and comply with the Elk Farming Handbook for all matters of animal care, health and management. Our farmers follow the industry-approved method of velveting using harvesting guidelines established by The North American Elk Breeders Association, which they state in the "The Velvet Management Handbook." MCEF harvests velvet using "Velvet Harvesting Guidelines" chart published by NAEBA, to insure proper length and outgrowth to achieve maximum nutritional value. Velvet Processing - All processing is done at a government inspected antler drying facility per Federal or State regulations for product quality, all drying procedures are approved by antler velvet industry experts. Traditional Korean method of drying is used. Drying is slow, low heat, and use of fans, much like the convention oven of today. Grinding and pulverizing antler is done to meet requirements established by the FDA encapsulating lab. Every batch of ground antlers used is 100 % antler with no additives, using the entire antler, including tip and base. A microbiological analysis is done for each batch of processed ground antlers at a pharmaceutical testing laboratory to ensure product safety. The test includes the following: an aerobic plate count, salmonella, coliform, E. Coli, Staphylococci, yeast and molds. Each batch of antlers must meet the microbiological specifications established for FDA approved Laboratories. Analytical results are kept on file at the farms. A copy of the Laboratory Report is available upon request to all buyers. Encapsulation - is performed at an FDA Inspected Laboratory using current General Manufacturing Practices (cGMP) Each batch is assigned a batch number and expiration date, which is identified and stamped on the label. Sample bottles from each batch are held in an accredited warehouse for tractability. Each bottle of velvet antler is safety sealed to ensure consumer protection. All labels meet the labeling requirements established by the Dietary Supplement Health and Education Act of 1994 (DSHEA).

The Elk Industry

North American elk, or wapiti, are among the most majestic animals on the continent. Second largest of the deer family, exceeded only by the moose, elk once ranged over all of Canada, the United States (except for Florida) and northern Mexico. Elk and man have interacted since the earliest human habitation of the continent. Elk bone and antler have been found in some of the oldest human inhabited sites in North America, and accounts of the early European explorers mention the strong impression these proud animals made on them.

The ranching of elk in North America goes back to at least the mid-nineteenth century, following a tradition of ranching of native species that extends back to the beginnings of agriculture. There are an estimated 150-160,000 farmed elk in North America, descended from generations of domesticated stock. Today, the capture of elk from the wild is illegal, and no reputable elk rancher will have any part of such activities.

About NAEBA

The North American Elk Breeders Association, or NAEBA, is a non-profit organization, founded to promote and protect the elk farming and ranching industry. The primary goal of the association is to educate its members and the general public about the rewards and opportunities that are available through participation in the industry as a legitimate diversified agricultural pursuit. NAEBA is recognized by federal authorities as the voice of the industry, and enjoys mutually benefiting association with the Federal Farm Bureau, as well as Allied Industry Status in the United States Animal Health Association.
